Field Grown Roots Only

CHAS. W. REDDING

BOURNEDALE, MASS.

TO MY CUSTOMERS:—

GREETINGS.

Well another year has gone by and a new one is beginning since my last visit to you through my catalog. May we have many happy returns of the occasion.

I have endeavored to make my catalog this year even more interesting and helpful to you in the growing of your dahlias and gladiolus. This is my 21st year of growing the dahlia commercially and I am very glad to pass along any information I can of my results from experimenting with the dahlia during that time. I am also greatly interested in hearing from my customers of their results with their dahlias or gladiolus.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to visit my gardens when in bloom which is generally from July 15th to Oct. 15th. There are always many new introductions to be seen, many of them my own that have never been listed. A wonderful sight that is well worth the journey.

The Dahlia Gardens are located in the southern part of the town of Plymouth, Mass., Long Pond village. The mail address, which is misleading is Bournedale, Mass.

When coming to the Dahlia Gardens always inquire for the Long Pond road. When coming from the North or North-west inquire at Plymouth, from the South or South-west inquire at Buzzards Bay or Bournedale, and from Cape Cod inquire at Sagamore.

Thanking you for your generous patronage in the past, (many of you have purchased dahlias of me nearly every year for a long time) and wishing you all every success in the future, I am,

Yours very truly,
Chas. W. Redding.

FERTILIZER

One must study their own soil conditions to grow dahlias at their best. Some soils are lacking in what is plentiful in others. The three most important elements required in the soil are ammonia, phosphorous and potassium. The ammonia benefits the growth of the plants above ground, phosphorous improves the root growth causing them to reach out and find the elements they require, also hastens the maturity and aids in the producing good seed. Potassium is the balancing ration of the others and gives color to the flowers and is necessary in the maturing good roots that will keep well. Ammonia (Nitrogen) is obtained by the use of stable manure, cattle preferred, or commercial cattle or sheep manure. Care must be taken as to much manure will cause a vigorous plant growth with a loss in blooms and root growth. Phosphorous (P. acid) we get from the use of bone meal, also some nitrogen. Potassium (Potash) in the use of hard wood ashes. A good balanced commercial fertilizer should contain 4% Ammonia, 6% P. acid, 10 to 15% Potash. Do not use nitrate of soda. It will produce a few large flowers but is very harmful to the root growth. Where manure is used it is well to have it put on in the fall. The commercial fertilizer I do not use until the plants are well up. It is then scattered between the rows and cultivated. Later in the season a second application is given if necessary.

ROOTS vs. GREEN PLANTS

Be sure to get good growing roots or plants of reliable growers, stock that is guaranteed to grow and prove true to name. I do not get good results from green plants, but many claim to do so. With me they are a great deal of care and the loss from weather and insects too great to bother with. I also find that most of the green plants do not produce as good a clump of roots that will winter well. They bloom later and produce a few large flowers for exhibition. However I find June planted roots will do the same and give you a good clump of roots in the fall. When planting green plants be sure to plant them deep and fill in about them as they grow. Many are lost by shallow planting. They should be watered well and protected from the hot sun for a few days. Also care must be taken to protect them from cut worms. Avoid stock that has been over propagated or forced as plants or roots are sure to be weakened.

LOCATION

The dahlia will grow well in most any location with proper care, but there are certain conditions under which they seem to out do themselves. Good location, kind of soil, proper feeding and the amount of care given them having a lot to do with the results. Avoid planting near buildings, walls, thick hedges or under trees. Although I have seen wonderful dahlias grown occasionally under these conditions it is best to avoid doing so as the result will generally prove a failure. They like to be right out in the open where they can get the full benefit of the sun and wind most of the day. They do much better if planted in beds by themselves rather than in a crowded garden with a lot of other flowers. They can not get the proper cultivation they need planted in that way. Never plant dahlia roots in low wet places. Although they like plenty of water they must not stand in it. Good drainage is very necessary.

THE SOIL

A light sandy soil is the ideal soil for the dahlia, however most any soil can be made to grow good dahlias. One must study the condition of their soil and find out what is lacking. A poor sandy soil is better than a heavy rich soil. Where soil is heavy it is advisable to work in a lot of coal ashes, sand or peat moss to lighten the soil and improve the drainage. Where the soil is very heavy do not be afraid of adding too much. Coal ashes are generally the most convenient and can be put on the gardens through the winter to be spaded or plowed under in the spring. Most garden soils are more or less sour and require liming. An occasional top dressing of land plaster or slacked lime is very beneficial, as it sweetens the soil and helps the flowers. On light sandy or gravelly soils it is advisable to sow winter rye to be plowed under in the spring. This will add humus to the soil which is lacking in light soils. Where season is long and the roots are not harvested until late the rye can be sown among the dahlias with out any harm and will get a good start before cold weather. Where the drainage is slow and the soil is apt to remain wet until late it is well to ditch it, running the ditches with the slope of the land. The bottom of the ditches can be filled with sand or any other material that will not rot, and then filled with the garden soil to the surface level. Care should be taken to place the drainage material below the spading or plowing depth.

I SELL ONLY FIELD GROWN ROOTS OF MY OWN GROWING

PLANTING

Plow or spade the soil as soon as it is in good workable condition. Do not plow when the soil is wet. It should be dry enough to fall apart when plowing. Do not plant roots too early especially in heavy soils. May 1st to May 15th is about right for early blooming, June 1st to 15th for late blooming. Roots planted May 1st should begin blooming by the middle of July. When the ground is ready dig the holes or plow the furrows 3½ ft. apart between the rows and 3 ft. apart in the row. It will be well now to put in the stakes as it is a good time to get them in and you will not harm the roots putting them in later, also you will be able to get them better into the ground. It is a good plan to plant the roots on the same side of each stake so that you will know just where they are when beginning to cultivate if some of them are not above ground. Place the roots flat down with their growing sprout up, covering the root 5 inches deep. I find planting 2 roots at each stake, one on each side in the row saves a lot of stakes and a lot of hard work. They do just as well in this way. The dahlias can not mix by planing the roots near each other. Do not plant green plants before June 1st.

CULTIVATION

The dahlia should be cultivated freely, beginning as soon as they appear above ground and continuing until they are blooming. The cultivation should be deep at first, but as the roots develop a shallow cultivation is all that is required. Keeping the ground well cultivated makes a soil mulch that conserves the moisture and saves watering. My fields are never watered except by what rain falls and seldom suffer for water, even in the dry spells. After plants are blooming they do not need cultivating. When possible after cultivation is over, a good mulch of straw, old hay or peat moss about the plants is very beneficial. Never hill up your dahlias. Loosen the soil about the plants but do not draw it up about the stalks. When watering a good soaking once in a while is much better than sprinkling them every day. Just wetting the soil will cause the roots to grow towards the surface to get the water, then when it is hot and dry they will suffer. When the ground is well soaked they will grow down naturally. When the plants are about 2 feet high they should be tied up to the stakes and again later when necessary. One stalk to each plant is enough to let grow, never more than two.

PESTS

CUT WORMS. A troublesome pest that is very fond of young dahlia shoots. When a root is planted they really do but little harm as the plants will still continue to grow. This will make them about two weeks later coming into bloom. When green plants are set out they must be protected as they will be a total loss if cut off by the cut worm. A paper collar should be put around the plants when planted. This should go an inch below the surface and one and one half inches above. This will generally save them. Poison bait is often used, a mixture of bran, molasses and paris green. Scattered among the plants this will destroy a great many. Vermine is also very effective in ridding the gardens of cut worms and many other insects. This is a liquid gas that when applied penetrates all through the soil killing the eggs as well as the insects. The last few seasons I have been getting very good results with turpentine, mixing one table spoon full of turpentine to 3 gallons of water. This is sprinkled on and about the young plants as they are coming up. I do not know if it kills the cut worm or just drives it away, but I do know that they keep away from the dahlias and glads as well, and that it does no harm to the foliage.

THE CORN BORER. This fellow is a real bad pest and must be kept down. They are rather hard to deal with as they work within the stalk and will hardly be noticed until the damage is done unless a thorough search is made for them regularly. It is well to go over the plants every day or two examining the stalks carefully. If the corn borer is there a hole will be found in the stalk where it has entered. The stalks can then be cut open, lengthwise of the stalk, from hole upwards. The worm is generally found above the hole. This will do but very little harm to the plant. I have found another good way is to keep an oil can handy, filled with liquid poison (arsenate of lead) and when I find a hole where they have entered I force a liberal amount of the poison into the stalk well above the hole. This has proved very successful. All dahlia stalks, and all other plant or weed stalks should be gathered up and burned in the fall, around the outside of the garden as well as those in it. I find that a great percentage of the borers are found in the plants on the edges of the gardens. With a little care these pests can be kept under control.

GOOD FIELD GROWN ROOTS GIVE THE BEST RESULT

PESTS

LEAF EATING INSECTS. Leaf-hoppers, aphids, thrips and red spider are all leaf eating insects and must be controlled by spraying or dusting. A nicotine spray or dust will control these troublesome pests. They should be applied during the warmest part of the day when the sun is shining. There seems to be little choice between the liquid spraying or the dusting methods, either one will keep them under control if done thoroughly. Start spraying early when the plants are young as the insects are quite small and can do a lot of damage before discovered. It is best to get there first. A good spraying early may save you a lot of trouble later.

DAHLIA STUNT

After many years of growing and experimenting with the dahlia I do not find any dahlia disease that we need to worry about. The dahlia stunt is a disease only in as far as lack of vitality is concerned, and that is easily over come by planting only good healthy stock and taking the proper care of them. The greater part of the stunt in the dahlia is caused by insects that sap the vitality of the plants. The balance is lack of vitality caused by several minor things, as by planting over propagated stock, green plants or roots, by planting old mother roots, or roots that have been over fed and forced to the limit to produce immense blooms for exhibition.

CUT FLOWERS

When cutting flowers for decorating or exhibition purposes, they should be cut late in the evening or early morning as they will keep much longer if cut before the sun reaches them. Cut good long stems as the plants will do all the better for the pruning. Remove the lower leaves and put in cold water in a cool place until wanted. When using a little salt in the water will help them to stay in good condition longer. Also another method is to dip the stems into scalding water a few moments and then putting them at once in to cold water. Keep them in a cool, dark place until wanted. When dipping the stems care should be taken to protect the flowers from the heat. Cut the blooms freely, there will be plenty more and better ones. Remove all blooms when beginning to fade.

DAHLIAS FROM SEED

Growing dahlias from seed is very interesting. All the wonderful new dahlias are produced in this way. There is a great deal of pleasure watching each new one open, knowing every one will be different, and hoping each new one will be a beauty. The usual way recommended for planting dahlia seed is in-doors or under glass, transplanting to small pots or flats when large enough to handle easily and again to the garden after the first of June.

I discarded this method as I found it required a great deal of time and labor and I was not satisfied with the results. Several years ago I started planting my seed in the open ground June first, quite thickly in rows three feet apart. There they grow undisturbed, except for cultivation until digging time. I plant about 10,000 seed each year and find 75% bloom before frost. Those showing promise, large double flowers, having good stems and good colors, are kept for further trial the following season, as are also those that do not bloom. No fertilizers are used and but very little the second year. The third year only the very finest are kept and then they are cared for in the regular way. By this method and carefully selecting of seed year after year from only the finest and largest varieties, I have produced many wonderful varieties, such as Mrs. Chas. W. Redding, Elizabeth (Lizzie) Ford, Oh-Henry, Red Sox, Miss Cape Cod, The Co-ed, The Aristocrat and many others that are well worth growing. When saving your own seed save only from the very best varieties. It hardly pays to try for seed until late in September or October as the large double flowers do not set seed until late when they begin to show open centers. When purchasing seed, the question of buying hand pollonized seed or those crossed by the bees, one must decide for oneself. My experience with seed has proved to be about 100% in favor of the bees. My experience with high priced, hand pollonized has been costly and a total loss. I have never produced a dahlia from these seed that I have kept after the second year. The many letters received from customers, telling me of their terrible disappointments from their high priced, hand pollonized seed, shows that their results have been the same. I greatly doubt if 10% of the wonderful dahlias introduced the last few years come from hand pollonized seed.

GROWING DAHLIAS FROM SEED IS VERY INTERESTING, TRY IT.

EXHIBITION FLOWERS

If one wishes to grow only a few extra large dahlias for exhibition, disbudding and pruning should be started as soon as the first buds appear. Only one stalk should be allowed to grow. When the flower buds appear, they are generally in clusters of three, all but the center bud on each branch should be pinched out as soon as large enough to handle, then there will be new shoots starting down the length of branch at each pair of leaves, these should also be pinched out except for the last pair nearest the main stalk. After the flower has bloomed and been cut off the stem also should be cut off down to the shoots that were left to grow. All the strength of the new growth will now be forced to these shoots which will develop new long stems and flower buds, when again the disbudding and pruning can be repeated. After the middle of September it is best to stop the disbudding or pruning and let them grow naturally as it will help in the maturing of the roots. Work a little fertilizer into the soil about the plants two or three weeks apart and water well or water occasionally with liquid manure.

PROPAGATING

I am not in favor of propagating by cuttings as it can be very easily over done to the injury of the stock. Many fine varieties have been so weakened by wholesale propagation that in a short time it is impossible to get good stock of them. Propagating by cuttings is a quick and cheap way of getting a large stock of the new varieties and is often over done. However many believe in this method and probably no great harm would be done if only a reasonable amount of cuttings were taken. To propagate by cuttings, start the clumps under glass in the early spring, setting them in the soil leaving the part where the stalk and roots join just above the surface. Water occasionally and when the shoots are long enough to handle easily they should be cut off, not broken or pinched off, and rooted in sand. Use good clean, sharp sand. Water well at first and after that just keep them wet enough to prevent wilting. It requires from two to three weeks, some rooting much quicker than others. When rooted transplant in small pots or flats until it is time to plant. They should be gradually accustomed to a cooler temperature before planting out of doors. Do not plant them out before June 1st.

DIGGING AND STORING

After the frost has killed the plants they should be cut off close to the ground. Have tried many tools for cutting dahlias—but like the long handle pruning shear best. Allow the roots to remain in the ground two or three days before digging but not long enough for them to start growing again as they will if the weather is warm. It is not necessary to wait for the frost to kill the tops if it is late coming or if for any reason you wish to get them in. Proceed the same as though the frost had killed them. Select a warm, sunny day, digging them early and let them dry most of the day in the sun. Great care should be taken when digging and storing as they are easily bruised or broken and are then a total loss. When digging do not pull them up by the stalks, lift them out. An unheated, frost proof, well ventilated cellar is the ideal place for storing dahlias, where they can be put away with out packing. Heated cellars are more difficult as roots must be packed away in boxes or barrels and covered with some dry material as sand, sawdust or peat moss are all very good. Like the peat moss best myself. They should be looked over once or twice during the winter, giving them a little moisture if they show signs of drying. A cold vegetable or store room off of the cellar is often a good place to store them.

SEPARATING THE ROOTS

This should be done in the spring a short time before planting. Each clump should be examined before cutting to find where it is best to cut. The eyes or sprouts are situated where the roots and stalk meet, this is called the crown, and each root should be so cut to include a section of this crown. If the sprouts have not started when ready to plant they can be put in a light warm place and sprinkled, when they will soon start to grow. Roots vary in their manner of growth, some are very open and easy to separate, others very compact and more difficult. These are easier to separate if cut in half first by cutting through the stalk. One naturally wants to get as many from each clump as possible so must look them over carefully to see how to cut to the best advantage. There are several kinds of knives and tools used for separating the clumps. I prefer a good pair of pruning shears, but a sharp knife is also necessary at times. Keep in a cool place until planted. When cutting throw away the original or mother root. It will generally produce a stunted plant if planted again.

GUARANTEED ROOTS

I sell only field grown roots, grown by myself, and guarantee each root to grow and prove true to name. It is my wish to give perfect satisfaction to every customer and request them to let me know at once if dahlias are not perfectly satisfactory on arrival. Also if they fail to grow or prove untrue to name when blooming. Mistakes will occasionally happen in spite of every possible care taken to prevent them. I wish to make good my guarantee if any thing is unsatisfactory but can not do so if customer does not let me know.

ORDER EARLY

Order as early as possible, do not wait until planting time, many of the newer varieties are sold out early in the season, also I like to have plenty of time to lay out the roots and have them well sprouted when time to send out. Roots can generally be shipped any time after the middle of April, and can be shipped to any distance with perfect safety. All roots are delivered free at catalog prices unless otherwise stated. I do not substitute unless permission is given. Please use the order sheet when ordering. Be sure to write names and addresses very plainly when writing or ordering.

REMITTANCES

Payment must accompany all orders or forwarded before time of shipment. Remittances can be made in the form of Postal money order, Express money order, Registered letter, or if more convenient your personal check. Small amounts will be accepted in U. S. postage stamps.

FREE ROOTS

When ordering, if customers will send me the names and addresses of a few friends that they think might be interested in my catalog, I will remember them with some good extras for their kindness.

DAHLIA SEED

I sell but one grade of seed, selected from only the very largest and finest varieties, the same seed that I use for my own planting. The stock is always somewhat limited as I require a great many for my own plantings. The balance while they last are sold for $1.00 a package, of 100 seed, good count.

NAMED COLLECTIONS

For the benefit of the customers not familiar with the names of the dahlias and wish me to make the selection for them, I make up the following collections. They are made up from the very best varieties I can give at the price, and have always given perfect satisfaction to all who have purchased them. You are guaranteed wonderful value and they will be found listed in the catalog at about double the price you pay when buying these collections. Selection of the varieties must be left to me, but will be made up from any class of classes desired. Each root will be named and labeled and is guaranteed. The collections are put up in five grades, prices as follows; One dozen roots, all different, for $1.00, $2.00, $3.00, $5.00 or $10.00. One half of any except the $1.00 collection can be had at the same rate.

UNNAMED VARIETIES

In the handling of the roots many become mixed in one way or another and can not be sold as named varieties. These are all good growing roots. Any one wishing a good display of fine dahlias at a low cost will find these very satisfactory. Customer must pay the postage or express on these roots. Price $3.00 for 100 roots.

LABELS

So many customers write me for labels that I always keep a large stock on hand to supply them. These are sold in lots of 100 for $1.00 or $3.50 for 1000. Postage paid.

INFORMATION

Number of feet following the names, is the average height of that variety as grown in my fields.

Names followed with the letter (R) are introductions of my own that have been registered.

Names of originator of other varieties given if known.

Visitors welcome at all times. Do not fail to see the gardens when in bloom. Usually blooming from July 15th to October 15th.

When coming from the north or north west inquire at Plymouth, or, from the south or south west inquire at Buzzards bay and from Cape Cod inquire at Sagamore or Bourne. Always ask for the Long Pond Road, Plymouth, Mass. The gardens are located on the Long Pond Road half way between Plymouth and Cape Cod.

Cut flowers for sale during the blooming season.
